Start Time:	18.00 (UK Time)

Synopsis:

Ethics are becoming increasingly important in our world. Our human society has made and continues to make great advances in technology, communication, science, medicine, engineering and many other fields, yet the human race’s studies, efforts and energy spent on ethics, humanities and philosophy continues to decline in both scale and importance. This lecture and discussion are an effort to reverse that trend in the geosynthetics arena.

Do you know and understand the ethics policies of the organizations you belong to and the companies that participate in this industry? If you are a member of an organization, you should know what you have agreed to!

It should be stated that, with many ethical questions, there are not absolute “right” and “wrong” answers. Ethical questions and situations are proposed and the audience is asked to make their own individual decisions. However, the time spent thinking about this topic can benefit us all.
